Pastor KrisAnne's Korner

Greetings from the Smoky Mountains and the state of Tennessee! I'm enjoying a week of vacation with the family, especially the extra time with our "grown and flown" kiddos who we don't get to see nearly enough these days. But I'll be back Saturday, and this coming Sunday will be our last in the book of 1 Samuel. I hope you'll forgive me for skipping some of the drama between Saul and David, as David gathers his group of mighty men and flees Saul's violent temper. I'm also skipping over the beautiful and sad story of the significant friendship between David and Saul's son Jonathan. There are just too many good stories in scripture!

To provide a bit of explanation as to why I'm not taking a few more weeks to preach on those stories, too, let me say this: One of my commitments as a preacher is to do my best to teach "the whole counsel of God." That's a phrase we used in seminary a lot. It's a word of caution for preachers about how easy it is to focus on our favorite passages in the Bible and ignore the pieces we don't like as much. So you may have noticed that I've developed a rhythm of preaching that moves between the Old and New Testaments - switching back and forth throughout the year. I do this to keep myself honest about preaching the whole counsel of God. But I've been pleasantly surprised how this rhythm has reignited my own passion for the Bible, and the Big Story that plays out from Genesis to Revelation. The story God has written is truly amazing!

Back to my original point - this Sunday I'll wrap up the transition from Saul's kingship to David's.

We'll notice the characteristics of David's brand of leadership and what that means for us today. How does David use authority? How does he make decisions? How does he treat people? Why does God favor him over Saul? Beginning in August, I'll start a series on the Holy Spirit, concentrating mostly on passages in Acts and some of Paul's New Testament letters. May God continue to shape us by His Word, and I pray your passion for scripture is also growing stronger as we journey together through the whole counsel of God!
